One scene, three directors

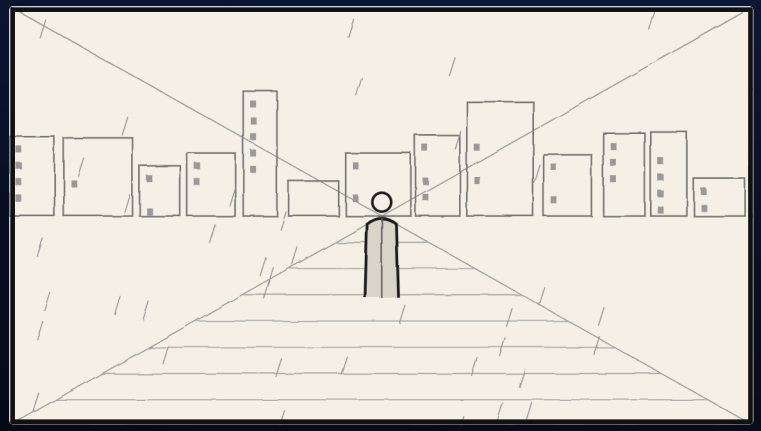

EXT. ROOFTOP – NIGHT. Rain. Delhi's lights blur below. ARJUN waits at the edge. MEERA steps out of the stairwell holding an old film reel — the last copy. He takes it. The city goes dark.

The same four beats, boarded as Stanley Kubrick, Wong Kar-wai and Satyajit Ray might shoot them. Styles are described by technique only.

STYLE · STANLEY KUBRICK-INSPIRED

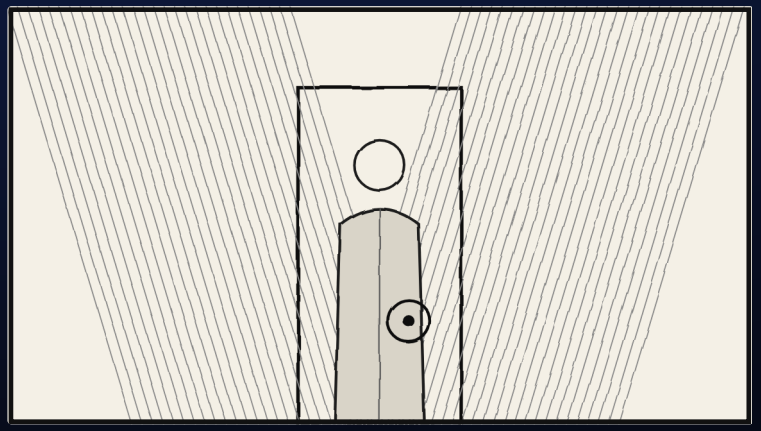

Stanley Kubrick

One-point perspective, dead-centre symmetry and static holds turn the rooftop into a trap.

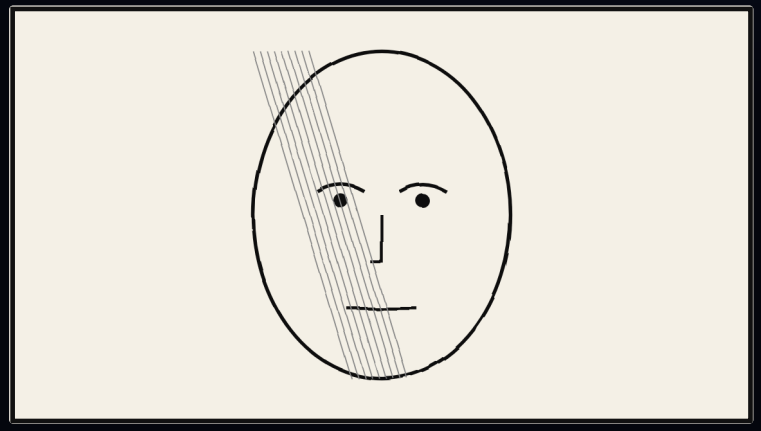

01 · WIDE · 18MM · STATIC

Dead-centre framing: Arjun tiny at the parapet, city as a vanishing grid.

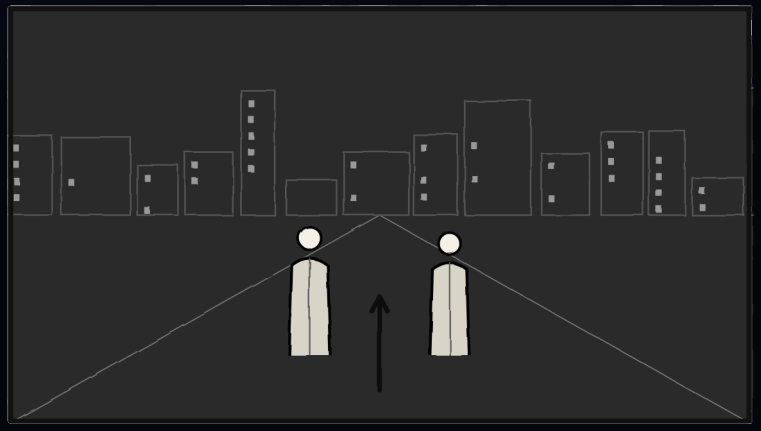

02 · MEDIUM · 24MM · STATIC

Meera framed dead-centre in the stairwell door, symmetrical walls closing in.

03 · CLOSE-UP · 50MM · STATIC

Arjun's face perfectly centred, eyes to lens. Unsettling stillness.

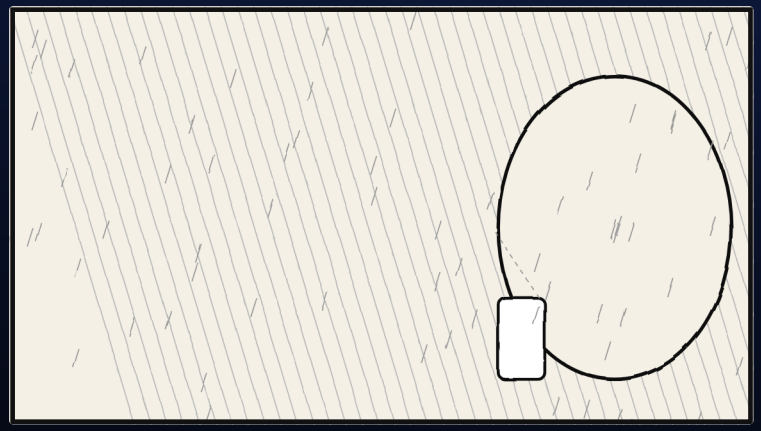

04 · WIDE · 18MM · SLOW TRACK IN

The city lights die in one symmetrical wave toward the vanishing point.

STYLE · WONG KAR-WAI-INSPIRED

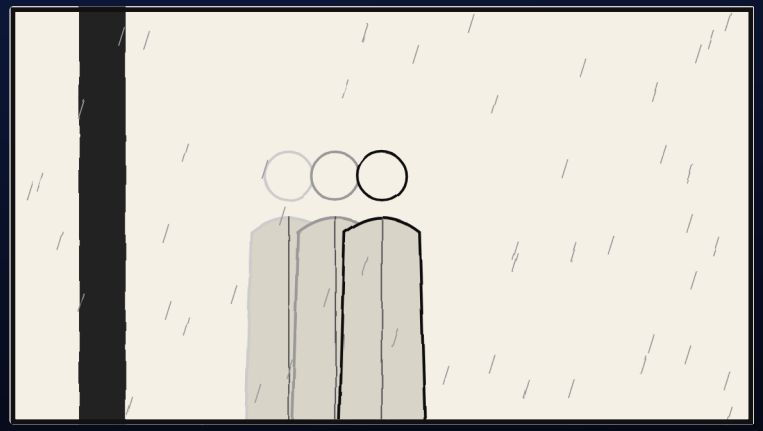

Wong Kar-wai

Off-centre, cramped frames, step-printed motion and rain make the moment feel like a memory.

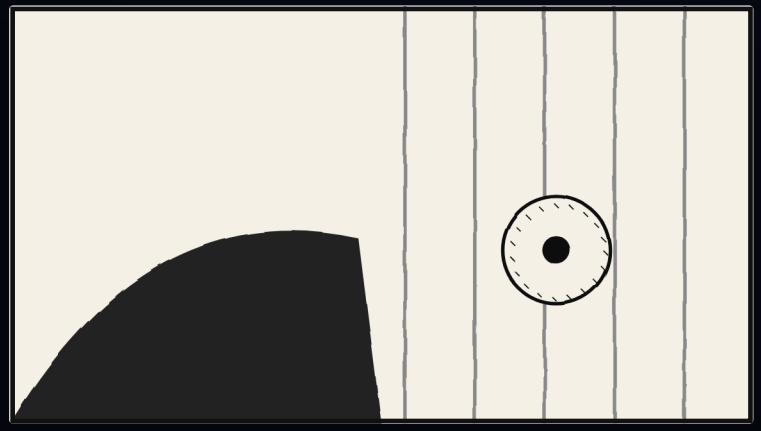

01 · CLOSE-UP · 40MM · HANDHELD

Arjun pushed to frame edge, phone glow on his cheek, rain smearing the lens.

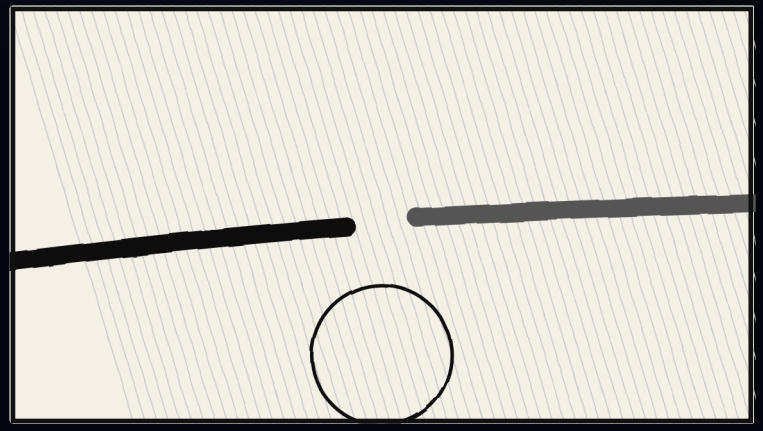

02 · MEDIUM · 35MM · STEP-PRINTED

Meera emerges in smeared slow motion: three ghosted outlines trail her.

03 · OVER-THE-SHOULDER · 50MM

Through a rain-streaked railing: her hand offers the film reel, his blurred shoulder fills half the frame.

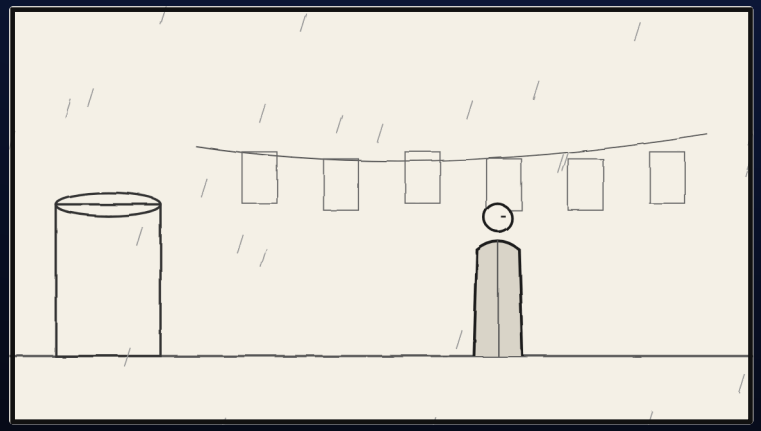

04 · EXTREME CLOSE-UP · 85MM

Their fingers almost touch on the reel. Everything else falls out of focus.

STYLE · SATYAJIT RAY-INSPIRED

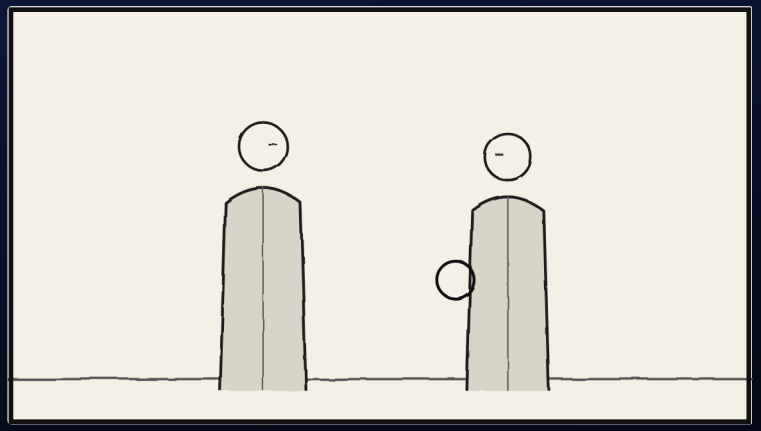

Satyajit Ray

Patient, humanist observation: ordinary space, natural light, and no cut until the characters decide.

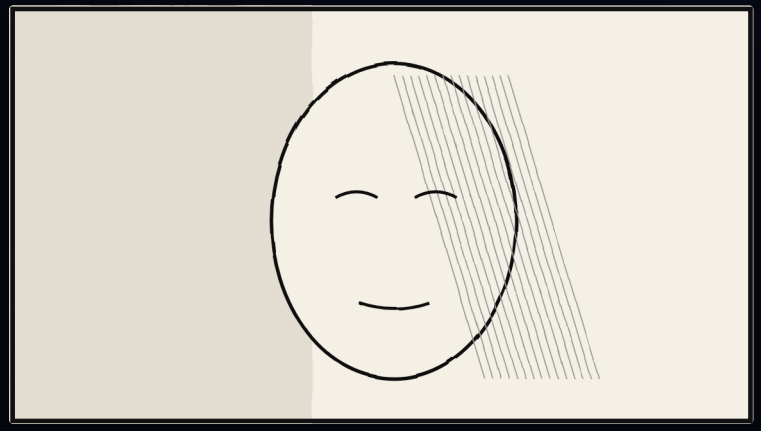

01 · WIDE · 28MM · STATIC, LONG HOLD

Rooftop clotheslines and water tanks frame Arjun: an ordinary roof, observed patiently.

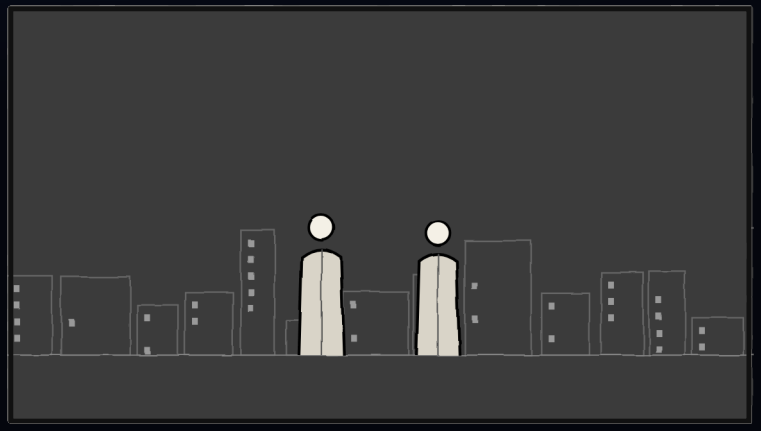

02 · MEDIUM TWO-SHOT · 40MM

Both in one frame, at a respectful distance. No cutting: we watch them decide.

03 · CLOSE-UP · 50MM · NATURAL LIGHT

Meera's face half in soft window light from the stairwell. A quiet, held look.

04 · WIDE · 28MM · STATIC

Lights go out. Two silhouettes stay still against the dark city: the scene breathes.